Methods of Evaluation

Methods of Evaluation

Types	Examples of classroom assessments
Exams/Tests	Multiple choice and/or essay exams. Examples of in-class essays: 1. Explain the origins of black slavery in the Chesapeake. How did the status of Africans in the Chesapeake change over time? What factors led to the permanent enslavement of black people in colonial Maryland and Virginia? 2. Evaluate the impact of World II and the Cold War on African American civil rights. How did African Americans seize opportunities to secure democracy and equality during in this period? Explain why the U.S. government was more responsive to attacks on American racism after 1945.
Quizzes	Multiple-choice and short answer.
Projects	Example: Conduct an oral history interview and write a 4-5 page essay comparing and contrasting the perspectives and experiences of a person at least 50 years or older, and who lived through a significant period in African-American history, with the class secondary and primary sources. Students must use supporting evidence from the class readings to interpret their interview and place it in historical context.

Assignments

Reading Assignments

Regular textbook reading assignments, as well as supplemental and primary source readings such as "Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass." Douglass, Frederick. Bedford Books. 2017

Writing Assignments

Will include out-of-class writing assignments.

Example: "In a 5 page essay, students will examine slave narratives. Papers will analyze two or three themes revealed by the narratives and compare the narrative's discussion to the course readings. Students may choose to focus on the sexual exploitation of slave women, the separation of families, slave resistance, and/or other themes."
